RE: CDPP Meeting Report

On November 18-20, I attended the semi-annual meetings of the Consortium for Diversified Psychology Programs (CDPP) and the National Psychology Advisory Association (NPAA), as the representative of the Psychology Department. Here is a brief report on the highlights of the meetings. (If anyone is interested in seeing the full minutes when they become available, let me know.)

NPAA

APA accreditation and listing in the National Register are increasingly being written into laws and regulations as the standard for eligibility for the psychology license. However, NPAA has generally been quite successful in lobbying for equivalency provisions that maintain access to licensing for graduates of accredited alternative schools. Although licensing boards are often sympathetic to the exclusionistic claims of APA and state associations, legislators and governors often are not. NPAA publishes an annual listing of the status of each state, and students can contact the NPAA regional coordinator for current information on a particular state. Some type of action is currently underway in Arizona, Colorado, Indiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, North Carolina, South Carolina, and the Province of Ontario.

There was considerable discussion as to who is currently representing the interests of humanistic clinical practice and practitioners. There was general agreement that NPAA needs to use its limited resources primarily to address access issues. However, there was
